About the Lecture:

Ever since Islamic investment certificates penetrated the Islamic finance space more than 10 years ago, both issuers and investors have played an instrumental role in their rising acceptance/popularity as an alternative instrument for investments. But despite this growth and investor interest, most Shari'ah-compliant certificates have advanced only at the legal level, whilst relatively little work has been done at creating products with dynamic allocation mechanisms on Shari'ah-compliant underlyings. Ahmad will explain the current status of the Islamic structured products industry and the way forward for these instruments to offer unique, bespoke solutions for investors. He will cover issues that are often encountered in structuring Shari'ah-compliant products at the underlying asset and strategy level.
